

Teaching Fellow – DME

Do you have a flair for teaching?

Do you want to improve your teaching skills?

This post is for you. The post is for 12 months, starting 2nd August 2023.

The teaching component will take up 50% of the job and mainly you will be teaching students allocated to the Department of Medicine for the Elderly (DME). DME teaches students from all three clinical years and also teaches students on a post-finals “MAST” course that prepares students for clinical practice. The students come from the University of Nottingham. There will be a mix of students from the graduate entry course based at Derby, and the standard undergraduate medical course.

In your teaching role you will be responsible to Dr Rob Skelly, Consultant Geriatrician. You will work with an experienced nurse clinical educator.

You will have some responsibilities to help with teaching or examinations outside of DME as directed by the education department. The education department employs a number of teaching fellows to help with this work.

You will have opportunity to teach at the bedside, to conduct small group teaching in the education centre (sometimes with volunteer patients) and on the simulation suite. There will be opportunity to develop and evaluate new teaching sessions.

We will support you to complete a post-graduate certificate in clinical education at University of Nottingham.

There will be a separate interview for the teaching component of the job.

For further information contact Dr Skelly via email: rob.skelly@nhs.net.

Teaching Fellow – Medical Education

Not sure what to do in August 2023?

Looking to improve your CV towards IMT/CT/StR Applications?

Considering a career involving education?

Would you like to gain experience in teaching, with the opportunity to be involved with OSCE examinations?

The Medical Education Department at University Hospitals of Derby and Burton NHS Foundation Trust is looking to appoint a 50% Teaching Fellow to join our team of Teaching Fellows/ACPs in the Medical Education department.

The Royal Derby Hospital is a major teaching hospital delivering upwards of 12,000 medical student weeks of teaching per year.

The post is for 12 months and the successful candidate will;

- Have the opportunity to undertake a qualification in Medical Education, with the Trust contributing towards the cost for the successful applicant.

- Be part of a team of full time clinical teaching fellows and ACPs.
- Work with relevant clinical teaching teams across all specialties to provide high quality teaching for students on placement with the Trust.
- Continue to develop the teaching programmes in line with the University of Nottingham curriculum.
- Work closely with the University in planning clinical examinations.

This post is suitable for trainees who have already obtained MBBS or equivalent and have 2 years post-graduate experience. It would be particularly suitable for trainees who wish to take time out of their programme to gain experience in Medical Education.
